

It's low tide on the sound

I walk out for air, we all walk out for air;
I look at the water and wait, willing up a prehistoric fish, demanding a back full of warty nubs and diamond studs from the olive water. Waiting makes a room, red curtains closing, opening, closing, like red lips in twin peaks.
My fish fogs in, fogs out.

Rachel Miller

